How to use the workbook

The whole system fits into one match-review loop.

1. Choose one focus before queueing. A focus is observable: drone one room ahead, hold crosshair at head height, or save one camera for the late round.
2. Play without trying to fix everything at once. Your job is to notice the focus in real rounds.
3. Review one round—not the whole night. Mark the first decision that made the round harder.
4. Write one correction for the next match. Keep it short enough to remember under pressure.
5. Repeat the same correction until your evidence changes, then choose the next one.

THE RECON 6 RULE

A useful goal describes a decision you control. “Win three matches” is an outcome. “Drone the room I enter” is a controllable action.

My reason for learning Siege

The teammate or community I will learn with

What a successful first 30 days would look like

Choose a job before choosing a highlight

Roles are responsibilities, not permanent labels. A five-player team needs information, entry pressure, breach/clear utility, site structure, and trade coverage. Start with the job whose decisions you can explain.

Preference	Role to test
I enjoy acting first	Entry / aggressive flex
I enjoy planning the execute	Support / secondary support
I switch jobs easily	Flex
I like protecting the objective	Anchor / site support
I like gathering early map information	Roamer / mobile flex

Role I will test first

What my team should be able to expect from me

Role I need to understand even if I do not main it

Learn a map in five layers

1. Name the four bomb-site pairs.
2. Learn one safe attack entry and one defender starting position.
3. Learn the stairs, major connectors, and routes between floors.
4. Learn five callouts that change a teammate's decision.
5. Learn one default attack and one default defense, then revise from match evidence.

DO NOT MEMORIZE EVERY ROOM FIRST

The useful unit is a route between decisions: spawn → entry → control → execute, or setup → pressure → fallback → retake/denial.

Use ranks as evidence bands, not identity

Rank is a result influenced by your decisions, teammates, opponents, matchmaking, and volume. The tier pages below give practice priorities—not a guarantee that a checklist earns a rank.

Band	Primary evidence
Copper / Bronze	Build repeatable controls, objective awareness, and one useful job.
Silver / Gold	Reduce unforced mistakes and coordinate simple executes.
Platinum / Emerald	Adapt from evidence, manage utility/time, and trade consistently.
Diamond / Champion	Prepare, communicate, and review at a team-system level.

HOW TO READ THE LADDER

Within each tier, V is the starting division and I is the highest. Y11S3 also announces a separate SoloQ-only Legend Division that Ubisoft says opens mid-season for eligible high-skill players. It is not a ninth live Ranked 3.0 tier in this August 23 edition.

Division at day 1

Division at day 30

Decision evidence that improved, regardless of rank

Days 1-2

Two short missions. Play enough rounds to collect evidence; stop before review turns into autopilot.

DAY 01 • Name the objective

Before each round, say how your side can win and check the clock at 60 and 30 seconds.

☐ Focus stated ☐ Evidence captured ☐ One correction chosen

Evidence: _____

Next-match correction: _____

DAY 02 • Crosshair audit

Track five first contacts. Was your crosshair already near the likely head position?

☐ Focus stated ☐ Evidence captured ☐ One correction chosen

Evidence: _____

Next-match correction: _____
